Call me by my true names

Do not say that I'll depart tomorrow because even today I still arrive.

Look deeply: I arrive in every second to be a bud on a spring branch, to be a tiny bird, with wings still fragile, learning to sing in my new nest, to be a caterpillar in the heart of a flower, to be a jewel hiding itself in a stone.

I still arrive, in order to laugh and to cry, in order to fear and to hope. The rhythm of my heart is the birth and death of all that are alive.

I am the child in Uganda, all skin and bones, my legs as thin as bamboo sticks, and I am the arms merchant, selling deadly weapons to Uganda.

I am the twelve-year-old girl, refugee on a small boat, who throws herself into the ocean after being raped by a sea pirate, and I am the pirate, my heart not yet capable of seeing and loving.

I am a member of the politburo, with plenty of power in my hands, and I am the man who has to pay his "debt of blood" to, my people, dying slowly in a forced labor camp.

My joy is like spring, so warm it makes flowers bloom in all walks of life. My pain if like a river of tears, so full it fills the four oceans.

Please call me by my true names, so I can hear all my cries and laughs at once, so I can see that my joy and pain are one.

Please call me by my true names, so I can wake up, and so the door of my heart can be left open, the door of compassion.

Thich Nhat Hanh

See Thay’s commentary on the next page
Thay talks about his poem “Call me by my true names”

In Plum Village, where I live in France, we receive many letters from the refugee camps in Singapore, Malaysia, Indonesia, Thailand, and the Philippines, hundreds each week. It is very painful to read them, but we have to do it, we have to be in contact. We try our best to help, but the suffering is enormous, and sometimes we are discouraged. It is said that half the boat people die in the ocean. Only half arrive at the shores in Southeast Asia, and even then they may not be safe.

There are many young girls, boat people, who are raped by sea pirates. Even though the United Nations and many countries try to help the government of Thailand prevent that kind of piracy, sea pirates continue to inflict much suffering on the refugees. One day we received a letter telling us about a young girl on a small boat who was raped by a Thai pirate. She was only twelve, and she jumped into the ocean and drowned herself.

When you first learn of something like that, you get angry at the pirate. You naturally take the side of the girl. As you look more deeply you will see it differently. If you take the side of the little girl, then it is easy. You only have to take a gun and shoot the pirate. But we cannot do that. In my meditation I saw that if I had been born in the village of the pirate and raised in the same conditions as he was, there is a great likelihood that I would become a pirate. I saw that many babies are born along the Gulf of Siam, hundreds every day, and if we educators, social workers, politicians, and others do not do something about the situation, in twenty-five years a number of them will become sea pirates. That is certain. If you or I were born today in those fishing villages, we may become sea pirates in twenty-five years. If you take a gun and shoot the pirate, all of us are to some extent responsible for this state of affairs.

After a long meditation, I wrote this poem. In it, there are three people: the twelve-year-old girl, the pirate, and me. Can we look at each other and recognize ourselves in each other? The tide of the poem is “Please Call Me by My True Names,” because I have so many names. When I hear one of the of these names, I have to say, “Yes.”

From: Peace is Every Step: The Path of Mindfulness in Everyday Life by Thich Nhat Hanh

---

What is Interbeing?

Interbeing is a relatively new term coined by Thây to describe the essential interconnectedness of the universe. It challenges us to look beyond the world of concepts and opposites. If we look deeply into the nature of our universe we can see all things as profoundly interdependent. In traditional Buddhism this was originally called dependent co-arising. At the heart of this understanding is the realisation that we have no separate self, that everything is empty of a separate self in a universe which is in a constant state of flux and change. The interdependent nature of all phenomena is central to many Buddhist teachings.

Experiencing interbeing
If the above sounds theoretical and abstract, just look out of the window and gaze at the view. Breathe, and bring yourself wholly into the present moment. It is possible that you may experience yourself as part of a continuum, part of the natural world. You may lose your usual sense of any separate self. It is this experience which is wisdom. This is not philosophy: you do not need a degree to understand it! It is a wisdom grounded in everyday experience.

The Lotus Bud ~ Issue No 25, May 2010
Beginning anew

On the withered tree the flower blooms.

Beginning anew we wake up to now. We bring attention to whatever we are doing, whether it be eating, sitting, talking or walking. In doing so thoughts and pains and irritations will come up. With practice they may become less or different or not a problem.

The Dharmmapada, verse 50, “Let none find fault in others. Let none see omissions and commissions in others. But let one see one’s own acts, done and undone.” For many our habit nature is to have a fault finding mind. That is our conditioning. We can begin anew with ourselves and others by changing our attitude. We may not like another’s behaviour; but rather than saying anything we need to pause and to investigate our reactions. Generally people are doing the best they can and learning to refrain from speaking and practice deep listening and loving speech is a great gift.

When we judge others we feel our muscles tighten in our jaw, in our shoulders, in our chest and our breathing becomes shallower. Sometimes we may even cause ourselves a headache. We need to sort out the facts from the story we have told ourselves. If I think Sam spoke to me in an angry tone and then I spin that off in my own head it then becomes much bigger than Sam saying something. I now have a melodrama and I don’t like Sam anymore as he was nasty, and I might try to find some allies in my story by gossiping. This is how friendships are ruined. It is all a matter of perception. Sam may/ have not been angry, we can say ‘well that is Sam’s issue to deal with’ if there was an issue; it isn’t my place to judge. We need to be present without participating in harmful action to ourselves or others.

The Dharmmapada, verse 50, “Let none find fault in others. Let none see omissions and commissions in others. But let one see one’s own acts, done and undone.” For many our habit nature is to have a fault finding mind. That is our conditioning. We can begin anew with ourselves and others by changing our attitude. We may not like another’s behaviour; but rather than saying anything we need to pause and to investigate our reactions. Generally people are doing the best they can and learning to refrain from speaking and practice deep listening and loving speech is a great gift.

When we judge others we feel our muscles tighten in our jaw, in our shoulders, in our chest and our breathing becomes shallower. Sometimes we may even cause ourselves a headache. We need to sort out the facts from the story we have told ourselves. If I think Sam spoke to me in an angry tone and then I spin that off in my own head it then becomes much bigger than Sam saying something. I now have a melodrama and I don’t like Sam anymore as he was nasty, and I might try to find some allies in my story by gossiping. This is how friendships are ruined. It is all a matter of perception. Sam may/ have not been angry, we can say ‘well that is Sam’s issue to deal with’ if there was an issue; it isn’t my place to judge. We need to be present without participating in harmful action to ourselves or others.

When we judge others we feel our muscles tighten in our jaw, in our shoulders, in our chest and our breathing becomes shallower. Sometimes we may even cause ourselves a headache. We need to sort out the facts from the story we have told ourselves. If I think Sam spoke to me in an angry tone and then I spin that off in my own head it then becomes much bigger than Sam saying something. I now have a melodrama and I don’t like Sam anymore as he was nasty, and I might try to find some allies in my story by gossiping. This is how friendships are ruined. It is all a matter of perception. Sam may/ have not been angry, we can say ‘well that is Sam’s issue to deal with’ if there was an issue; it isn’t my place to judge. We need to be present without participating in harmful action to ourselves or others.

Loving kindness practice is a wonderful meditation, when we pray for ourselves to be happy and for others also. In this meditation you come to the point where you pray for someone you dislike. The problem is that as long as you only do this it is simply wishful thinking. Especially when seen as an affirmation and not as an aspiration, you see yourself as separate from the person for whom you are praying. Until you have real understanding and compassion for this person the words will just be hollow. For instance you may not like the way someone else behaves, but until you understand why they act in this way, and love them anyway, then you have not developed loving kindness as far as you can. Indeed, we need to look deeply at ourselves to see what our issue is. We just need to sit and feel it in our body. God made man in his image; we are all perfect just as we are.

When we wake up, heaven is available to us twenty four hours a day. We learn to appreciate what we have, even the ache in the back or the person that irritates us. Impermanence is a blessing. The ache that was there may go and the irritation will subside, we don’t know what will happen but if we live long enough it will probably be replaced by another. Experience each moment just as is, nothing special, and yet very special.

Ettianne Anshin
WHO WE ARE
The Communities of Mindful Living are inspired by the Buddhist teachings of Zen Master Thich Nhat Hanh (pictured).

We aspire to live fully in each moment for the peace and happiness of ourselves and all beings. We meet regularly to observe the art of mindful living and to foster a supportive community of practitioners.

Contacts
Sydney, Inner West - John Barclay 9559 8805 barclayjohn0@gmail.com
Sydney South West - Khanh Le Van 9543 7823 melanie_le_van@yahoo.com.au
Lismore Area - Tony Mills 6688 6523 fivemountains@hotmail.com
Sylvania - Coral Miles 9544 7892 coralmiles@primus.com.au

www.lotusbudsangha.org

Our main activities

Wednesday Mindfulness Meditation at Camperdown
We welcome all to come join us for meditation practice - We meet at 7:30 pm each Wednesday at the Buddhist Library, Church St, Camperdown, Sydney.

Mindfulness Days - monthly
Once a month we offer a day of mindful practice and contemplation. The day normally consists of chanting sitting meditation, outdoor walking meditation (if weather permits), a dharma talk and lunch.

How to contribute to The Lotus Bud
In person at the Wednesday night group
• By e-mail to: cbarker@uow.edu.au
• By post to: Chris Barker, Faculty of Arts, Uni of Wollongong, 2500
Contributions can be short or long but need to be under 600 words.

Reading bell
As you read this magazine you have an opportunity to go back to the present moment.
You will notice a bell: 🧘‍♂️ throughout the magazine.
When you come to each bell, you may like to stop reading, clear your mind and return to your breath before continuing.

Coming events...
Mindfulness Day and recitation of the 14 mindfulness Trainings on May 9th
Details to be announced.

All images used with permission from www.flickr.com creative commons unless otherwise stated.